Aleksandr V. Lavrent'ev. "Konchak, knyaginya velikaa Yuryeva (Yury's Grand Princess), tsar's sister": the marriage of Grand Prince Yuri Danilovich and the relations of Moscow, the Golden Horde and Tver in the 1310s–1320s.

Summary: The article is focused on the short-time marriage of Yuri Danilovich (one of the first Moscow princes who became the Grand Prince of Vladimir) and Konchaka-Agafya (baptized sister of Uzbek Khan of the Golden Horde). It was the first of the few "international" marriages in the family of Moscow sovereigns in the 14th–15th centuries. The name of the Grand Princess descent from Genghis Khan is mentioned passingly in chronicles and other Russian medieval sources. Due to the lack of information, there are many questions about her life before marriage, the marriage itself, her death and legacy. Moreover, "Konchak, knyaginya velikaa Yuryeva" was involved, with or without meaning to, in the foreign policy tension between Moscow and Tver fighting for Grand Princedom status, in which her brother, the Khan of the Golden Horde, took an active part. The article attempts to reconstruct the biography of Grand Princess Konchaka-Agafya against the background of political events of the 1310s–1320s.

Keywords: Russia in the 14th century, Moscow, Tver, the Golden Horde, Grand Prince of Moscow Yuri Danilovich, Princess Agafya-Konchaka, Prince of Tver Mikhail Yaroslavich.

Anton V. Sergeev. Princes Pronsky in the Russian state of the 16th–17th centuries: historical and genealogical research.

Summary: The article deals with the genealogy, official activity, and evolution of land ownership of Ryazan Rurikid princes Pronsky, including the composition of the Russian line of this family, the total number of its male part, Mestnichestvo disputes involving the Pronskys, and the influence of political and demographic factors on their socio-political evolution in the 16th–17th centuries. The appendix to the article contains the genealogies of the Pronskys, taken from two unpublished genealogical books, and acts on land ownership of the family.

Keywords: princes Pronsky, social status, service, pedigree, land ownership, estate, patrimony.

Larisa M. Bogatova. Inspection logs of the Imperial Moscow Orphanage as a source for history and genealogy.

Summary: On June 25, 1837, Nicholas I signed a decree, according to which all the orphans and foundlings of unknown origin were nourished in peasant families, and, if they survived to adulthood, were assigned as state peasants. To control them, the rural expedition was created, a staff of mobile doctors was hired, and Instructions were issued for these doctors. Their inspections were documented in so-called inspection logs, which are now stored in the Central State Archive of the City of Moscow and have never been analysed before. This article discusses the features of log keeping and the historical and genealogical significance of these materials.

Keywords: orphanage, orphans, the rural expedition, inspection logs.

The boyar book in column form, 1630–1631 (publication by Egor N. Gorbatov).

Summary: This publication presents a members' list of the Sovereign's court, dated 1630–1631. It includes the information about their salaries. M.P. Lukichev defines manuscripts of this type as boyar books in column form. This document also supplements data on personnel of the Court, since the "authentic" boyar lists of this period did not survive in complete form.

Keywords: boyars, nobles, boyar books, boyar lists, Moscow ranks, the Sovereign's court.

Materials of the horse troops review at the Moscow Sovereign's court in 7161 (1653). Part 1: "Skazki" (testimonies) by Moscow nobles, foreign service-men and solicitors about readiness for regimental service (June 1653) (publication by Maksim R. Belousov).

Summary: The publication presents the first part of the materials related to the horse troops review at the Moscow Sovereign's court in the summer of 1653. The publication includes all currently known "skazki" (testimonies), submitted at the review: 416 "skazki" by Moscow nobles, 33 "skazki" by foreign service-men from the Moscow list, 58 "skazki" by solicitors and 4 "skazki" by other persons. The introductory article substantiates the proposed dates of "skazki" in the context of the other documents related to the horse troops review.
